The humidity made everything seem heavy. The hot sun beat down. Braverman and I were walking through Grimes Square. I was hungry. In New York you could always get a hot dog from a street vendor. No street meat here. A store called Wisconsin Giftique had a window display with small colored cheeses in the shape of farm animals. I felt like Dorothy plopped down in Munchkin Land.

A noisy dairy truck rumbled by too fast. Painted on the side: MILK DOESN'T GET ANY FRESHER THAN THIS. JUST ASK THE COW. I turned to Braverman. "What's with the big, bad dairy?"
