Settling New England

Why did people start colonies in New England?

In 1628, people called Puritans moved to New England.

They wanted to be free to follow their religion. Other Puritans started the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Everyone there had to have the same beliefs. No dissent, or disagreement, was allowed.

Roger Williams did not think this was right. He and his family went to what is now Rhode Island.

In Rhode Island, people could follow any religion. They lived in peace with Native Americans.

Some people left Massachusetts to find better land. They went to live in Connecticut. Others went north to start a fishing town. This became New Hampshire. Many Native Americans there lost their land to the colonists.
